Text 1

Text 1 is a chapter titled 'Things I Love' from the novel When the Night Comes, by Australian author Favel Parrett. It was first published in 2014. The protagonist, Isla, lives with her younger brother and mother in Tasmania. Bo, a sailor, begins a relationship with their mother and becomes a father figure to the two children.

---

We didn't have a lawn mower. Once a month the man from next door would mow our backyard. He liked mowing, he said. He would always do it early on a Saturday morning. I didn't mind because I was always up. My brother and I would get up early to watch the cartoons. They finished at 9 am, so if you didn't get up, you missed them. After the cartoons came hours and hours of sports shows.

Mum would stay in bed and she wouldn't get up even though the sound of the lawn mower was very loud and would have woken her.

Bo stood by the back door and watched the man mow.

"Isn't it great?" he said to me when I came outside. I nodded but I didn't know why. I didn't know what was great. When the man finished and left our yard, Bo ran down the concrete steps and got down on the grass. He rolled around, over and over, and when he stopped rolling he lay on his belly in the middle of the lawn.

My brother came out to see what was happening and we walked down the steps and stood at the edge of the grass together. He was already sniffing and my eyes had started to itch with all the bits of grass in the air. Bo put his face to the earth, breathed in deep, and he stayed like that for ages. When he looked up, the grass had made imprints on his face and he said, "I love grass!" It made us laugh, we didn't know why. "I love it," he said again and he rolled over and got up. His white T-shirt was all stained by the freshly cut grass.

"I feel like I haven't smelt grass since I was a boy."

"I get hay fever," my brother said and he rubbed his eyes, then started to sneeze. Bo took us inside and he washed my brother's face with a hot washcloth.

"Do you think your T-shirt is wrecked?" my brother asked when he had stopped sneezing. "Mum says grass doesn't come out."

Bo looked down at his stained T-shirt, brown with dirt and green with grass.

"It's perfect," he said. "My T-shirt is perfect."

Text 2

Text 2 is an extract from an historical biography of 21-year-old convict William Buckley, who was transported to Australia in 1803 aboard the HMS Calcutta. It was written by award-winning journalist Garry Linnell and published in 2019.

Escaping and surviving. If there are two things you're good at, two things you're going to be better at doing than just about anyone else, it's the art of disappearing. Not bad for a big man who finds it impossible to blend into a crowd, whose face and features are forever imprinted on anyone whose path you cross. Thing is, becoming a great escape artist is not about how anonymous you look, or how clever you might be at picking a lock. It's all in the timing, isn't it? When that opening comes, when that chance finally presents itself – often out of nowhere – you just have to take it.

You've done it in the past. If you hadn't taken chances you could still be laying bricks back in that rural village in Cheshire and siring<sup>1</sup> bastards like yourself all over the countryside. Or your bones could be rotting beneath the soil of a foreign country courtesy of a French bayonet or musket ball. But there was always a moment – maybe you will call it luck – that steered you in another direction.

Being accused of breaking into Mr Cave's drapery ... well, that didn't turn out so well. But you can call getting out of that prison hulk<sup>2</sup> a great escape by any measure and, now that you have made it out before a drunken guard belted you senseless just to make a name for himself, or a fellow convict slid a knife into your guts for the very same reason, or one of the rampant diseases claimed even your strong body, how do you fancy your chances here on the deck of the HMS Calcutta?

Not good, are they? There is an attachment of guards from the marines watching all of you shuffle aboard in your leg irons. Just before they take you below to the two big prison rooms you get a quick look around, enough to know things are going to be awfully cramped for the next six months. More than 500 of you – 300 convicts – all living in a world made of oak and tar 230 feet long and 41 feet wide. That's not much more than six square feet for each of you – a world less than half a soccer field, held together by nail and rope and more than a little of, yes, hope.
